But what about the saying, "Don't let your babies grow up to be holes?" That one, I can get behind. Holes are not awesome. They're empty, useless, and they just sit there taking up space. They don't contribute anything to society. They're just a drain on resources.

So, what's the difference between a cowboy and a hole? It's all in the way they're raised. Cowboys are raised to be responsible and respectful. They're taught to work hard and to take care of their belongings. They're also taught to stand up for themselves and for what they believe in.

Holes, on the other hand, are raised to be entitled and lazy. They're taught that they deserve everything without having to work for it. They're also taught to blame others for their problems and to never take responsibility for their own actions.

If you want your child to grow up to be a cowboy, you need to start by teaching them the importance of responsibility and respect. You need to teach them to work hard and to take care of their belongings. You also need to teach them to stand up for themselves and for what they believe in.

Raising a cowboy is not easy, but it's worth it. When you see your child grow up to be a responsible, respectful, and successful adult, you'll know that all your hard work was worth it.

Here are a few tips for raising a cowboy:

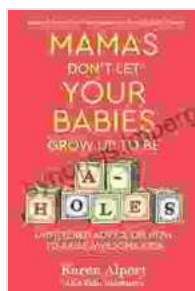

- Teach your child the importance of responsibility. Give them chores to do around the house and hold them accountable for their actions.
- Teach your child the importance of respect. Teach them to treat others the way they want to be treated.
- Teach your child the importance of hard work. Encourage them to set goals and work hard to achieve them.
- Teach your child the importance of standing up for themselves. Encourage them to speak their minds and to defend what they believe in.

- Be a good role model. Children learn by watching the adults in their lives. So, if you want your child to grow up to be a cowboy, you need to be a cowboy yourself.

Raising a cowboy is a challenge, but it's one of the most rewarding things you can do. When you see your child grow up to be a responsible, respectful, and successful adult, you'll know that all your hard work was worth it.

So, mamas, don't let your babies grow up to be holes! Raise them to be cowboys instead.
