Restorative justice is a philosophy and practice that seeks to repair the harm caused by crime and conflict. It is based on the belief that everyone has the potential to change and that everyone deserves a chance to make things right.

Restorative justice focuses on the needs of the victims, the offenders, and the community. It seeks to create a safe and supportive environment where everyone can participate in the healing process.

The restorative justice process typically involves the following steps:

1. Acknowledgement of the harm: The offender acknowledges the harm that they have caused and takes responsibility for their actions.
2. Dialogue: The victim and the offender have an opportunity to talk about the harm that has been caused and to share their perspectives.
3. Agreement: The victim and the offender reach an agreement on how to repair the harm.
4. Implementation: The victim and the offender work together to implement the agreement.

Restorative justice is a valuable tool for addressing conflict on college and university campuses. It can help to:

- Reduce crime and violence
- Improve campus safety

- Peace circles: Peace circles are gatherings where people come together to share their experiences and work towards healing and reconciliation.
- Community service: Community service can be a powerful way for offenders to make amends for their actions and to give back to the community.
