Verne was born in Nantes, France, in 1828. His father was a lawyer, and his mother was a devout Catholic. Verne was a bright and curious child, and he loved to read. He was particularly fascinated by science and adventure stories.

In 1847, Verne enrolled in law school in Paris. However, he soon realized that he was not interested in a career in law. He wanted to be a writer.

Verne's first novel, Five Weeks in a Balloon, was published in 1863. It was a huge success, and it launched Verne's career as a writer. Over the next few years, he published a number of other successful novels, including Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea and Around the World in Eighty Days.

However, Verne's success was not without its 代价. His father was a greedy man, and he often took advantage of Verne's financial success. Verne's mother was also abusive, and she often criticized him for his writing.

In addition to his family problems, Verne also suffered from a number of illnesses. He had diabetes, and he also suffered from severe headaches. These illnesses made it difficult for him to write, and they eventually led to his death in 1905.

Verne's story is a tragic one. He was a brilliant writer who was prevented from ever fully realizing his potential. Greed, abuse, and illness all played a role in his downfall.

But even though Verne's life ended in tragedy, his legacy lives on. His novels continue to inspire and entertain readers around the world. And his story is a reminder that even the most talented people can be brought down by the forces of greed, abuse, and illness.
