

The True Story of 29 Bomber Crew Combat and Captivity in the Korean War

On November 22, 1950, a B-29 Superfortress named the 'Lucky Lady' was shot down over North Korea. The crew of 11 men survived the crash and were taken prisoner by the North Koreans. They spent the next three years in captivity, enduring torture, starvation, and brainwashing. But through it all, they never gave up hope.

The Crash

The Lucky Lady was on a bombing mission over North Korea when it was hit by anti-aircraft fire. The plane caught fire and began to spin out of control. The crew bailed out, but only 11 men survived the jump.

The survivors landed in a remote area of North Korea. They were quickly captured by North Korean soldiers and taken to a POW camp.

The POW Camp

The POW camp was a harsh and unforgiving place. The prisoners were crammed into overcrowded barracks and given little food or water. They were subjected to torture, interrogation, and brainwashing.

Despite the hardships, the prisoners never gave up hope. They organized secret resistance groups and planned escape attempts. They also supported each other through the darkest of times.

The Escape

In 1953, the Korean War ended and the prisoners were finally released. They returned home to a hero's welcome.

The survivors of the Lucky Lady went on to live full and productive lives. They married, had children, and pursued careers. But they never forgot their time in captivity.

This book is their story, a testament to the indomitable spirit of the human soul.
