The Planning Stages

The planning for the Battle of Vimy Ridge began in the fall of 1916. The Canadian Corps was tasked with capturing the ridge, which was a key German stronghold. The Canadians developed a plan to use a creeping barrage to support their attack. This involved using artillery to create a wall of fire that would move forward with the troops.

The Canadians also trained extensively for the attack. They practiced their assault tactics and familiarized themselves with the terrain. The Canadians were determined to succeed at Vimy Ridge, and they were confident that they could defeat the Germans.

The Execution of the Attack

The Battle of Vimy Ridge began on April 9, 1917. The Canadian Corps attacked at dawn, and they quickly overwhelmed the German defenses.

The Canadians used their creeping barrage to great effect, and they were able to advance steadily up the ridge.

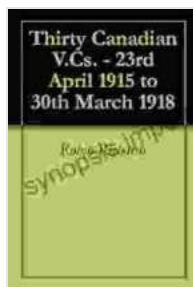

The Canadians faced heavy resistance from the Germans, but they refused to give up. They fought their way through the German trenches, and they eventually reached the top of the ridge. The Canadians had captured Vimy Ridge, and they had achieved a major victory.

Personal Accounts from Canadian Soldiers

Thirty Canadian Cs 23rd April 1915 To 30th March 1918 includes personal accounts from Canadian soldiers who fought in the Battle of Vimy Ridge. These accounts provide a firsthand look at the battle, and they offer a glimpse of the courage and determination of the Canadian troops.

One Canadian soldier, Private George Lawrence Price, wrote about his experiences at Vimy Ridge in his diary. He described the battle as "a hell of a fight," but he also expressed his pride in the Canadian Corps.

"We went over the top at dawn," Price wrote. "The Germans were waiting for us, and they put up a stiff fight. But we were too strong for them. We drove them back, and we took the ridge."
